Sadie Jenkins Receives 2025 NJWMA Scholarship Award

The NJWMA Scholarship Award is one of the association's most meaningful honors, given each year to support a deserving student as they take the next step in their education. The award recognizes academic excellence, community involvement, and leadership—qualities that reflect the spirit of the moving industry and the values of the New Jersey Warehouse & Movers Association (NJWMA).

At the NJWMA's 56th Annual Convention at the Golden Nugget in Atlantic City, the 2025 NJWMA Scholarship Award was proudly presented to Sadie Jenkins.

Sadie graduated this past May from Pennsauken Technical High School, where she served as Senior Class President, was inducted into both the National Honor Society and the National Technical Honor Society, and was recognized as Camden County's Best of Class for Community Service. Her teachers describe her as a student who "shows up"—always ready to lead, support others, and give back.

An early passion for building, sparked while helping her father with weekend carpentry projects, led Sadie to pursue carpentry in high school—one of only a few young women in her class. She also chaired the Community Service Committee for the Future Business Leaders of America, raising funds for the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention and earning a top ten finish at the state FBLA competition.

Now attending Rowan University, Sadie is studying Civil Engineering and Entrepreneurial Studies, with the goal of combining technical skill and business innovation to make a lasting, positive impact on her community.

NJWMA congratulates Sadie Jenkins on her achievements and is proud to help support her academic journey and future success.
